InterAct Launches an Integrated Technology Solution for Substance Abuse Treatment, Collegiate Recovery and Substance Abuse Prevention

Atlanta, GA — August 1, 2019 — InterAct today launched InterAct LifeLine, the first in a series of online technology solutions designed to reduce addiction relapse, improve long-term recovery care and offer drug abuse prevention support for families. LifeLine helps addiction treatment and collegiate recovery programs leverage technology to better serve their clients, students and families, keeping them connected and improving patient outcomes. InterAct is a newly-formed subsidiary of Convey Holdings and built on portal and networking technology developed by Convey Services.

"InterAct's new LifeLine technology automates how drug treatment programs manage and educate their clients, keep them connected to the program during the post-treatment aftercare phase and provide families the resources to support their loved ones through recovery," said Carolyn Bradfield CEO of InterAct. "In addition, LifeLine integrates with mobile technology used by drug and accountability courts in over 29 states to monitor participants. This mobile platform provides structure to keep individuals accountable to their care plan and promotes safety to improve recovery success."

The LifeLine solution provides addiction treatment and collegiate recovery programs with a custom branded knowledge portal for wellness and recovery education populated with an on-going stream of new content. The mobile platform and smart phone app communicate with clients for reminders and status checks and provides connections to treatment professionals both online and in person. Clients and their families can participate in virtual support groups, online classes, and discussion forums. LifeLine uses Bluetooth technology to monitor vital signs and can locate a client and provide alerts if there is a potential overdose risk.

"Addiction is a chronic disease that claims more than 70,000 American lives a year, costing almost a trillion dollars in healthcare, criminal justice and work-related costs," added Bradfield. "My 29-year old daughter was one of those victims who died from a drug overdose that potentially could have been prevented with this technology. Our program will improve safety and streamline processes to help programs and families better support those effected by this disease, protect them and put them on a path to long-term wellness."

InterAct is launching its first pilot programs in the collegiate recovery community with 6 major universities beginning in August. This fall, five regional drug treatment programs will pilot InterAct LifeLine implementing the technology and educational solution as an aftercare program for their clients, as well as a unique family support connection. All treatment facilities receive branded portals for clients and families, a continuous flow of education and content, the mobile application for structure and accountability, along with analytics to monitor results.
